

RAISING Caring LAISING

RESOURCES FOR SOCIAL & EMOTIONAL LEARNING

Imagine the skills that allow people to calm down when angry, make (and keep) friends, participate in community, and make fair and safe choices. These skills help kids (and adults!) succeed in school and life.

For this next school year, we'll share brief articles, short videos, and fun ideas from University of Wisconsin-Extension's Raising Caring Kids. The short articles and videos give ideas and activities to support your child's school success, positive behavior, and self-esteem.

Together we are raising caring kids!

What's In a Face?

The ability to understand how people feel by looking at their faces is an important skill. To see and know how someone feels can help children get along with other people and be successful learners. Parents and teachers can help children learn to look closely at a person's body language and face to build on the important skill of understanding how others are feeling.
