Contents Agriculture and husbandry -- Mines and stone quarries -- Brick workers -- Textiles and other manufacturing -- Street workers -- Garbage picking and begging -- The future.

Abstract Physician and photographer David L. Parker takes us beyond the headlines and into the textile factories, stone quarries, and garbage dumps where children are forced -- by unscrupulous adults or by lack of any other economic opportunity -- into the desperate cycle of child labor. His haunting and sensitive portrayal of these children preserves their dignity and humanity while exposing their often tragic circumstances.

Subject Term Child labor. Child labor -- Pictorial works.

Series Title Taking a stand

Contents Kids who work -- Caught in the machine -- Public outcry -- Mother Jones and Mr. Hine -- Strike! Strike! -- The law of the land.

Abstract In 1790 the first water-powered mill in America was run by children, some as young as 7 years old. They were paid pennies for a work day that might last more than 10 hours. As America grew, the children's plight grew worse. Exhausted by six-day work weeks and harsh conditions, millions of young workers had no time to play or go outdoors. They had no childhood. In time children and adults fought back, and the children went on strike to protest harsh conditions. Finally, during the last years of the Great Depression, the government took action, passing the Fair Labor Act.
